

Masthead Logo

The Iowa Review

Volume 5
Issue 3 Summer

Article 3

1974

The Poem Dresses up like Love

Earnest Sandeen

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Sandeen, Earnest. "The Poem Dresses up like Love." The Iowa Review 5.3 (1974): 4-4. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1632>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

THE POEM IS SHOWING

Slowly, without embarrassment,
the poem composes the candles on the sideboard
to show how mortal our hands are,
putting down or picking up a glass,
fingering among the hors d'oeuvres,
or touching a friend's shoulder.

In the twilight of table lamps and floor lamps which the poem invents
for the next room, how sadly our skeletons show through as we stand or sit, conversing with a certain animation.

THE POEM DRESSES UP LIKE LOVE

The poem contrives to look as old as love itself, Sappho in Merlin's white beard.
It questions the glum lover: So how did your story end? I told her I was leaving her.
I couldn't tell her I knew she was leaving me for her new lover. Your pride, was it?
(Stroking the beard.) My pride, yes. And besides
I didn't want her to hurt, even a little.

You ungrateful egotist, mutters the venerable poem, you could have left her a small gift of her guilt. What if she wants to remember you?